Upon creation, waterfall droplets undergo charge redistribution forming dipoles with negatively charged surfaces. The phenomenon of charge separation occurs as a consequence of the disruption of the water surface by splashing and bubbling, when moving liquid is aerosolized at an obstacle, aqueous surface or by aerodynamic break-up of water droplets during free fall (see Fig. 1). After breaking up, smaller fragments (or clusters) carry negatively charged OH remaining bigger fragments become positive positive value of droplet surface potential (+0.1 V) indicates that the water dipoles are preferentially oriented with the negative pole toward the gas phase, while the positive pole is oriented towards the liquid phase (Parfenyuk, 2002). Botti et al. (2004) suggested that OH ions are hydrated with 4 H₂O molecules with a presence of a weakly bound fifth water molecule, close to the hydrogen atoms. Negatively charged particles remain in the air and become thermophoretically dispersed, due to the cold air stream caused by the temperature difference between water and the surrounding air. The larger positively charged droplets precipitate to the ground, i.e. in the pond. As a result, negative air ion concentrations near waterfalls can reach several tens of thousands per cubic centimeter.

$1/f$ -noise, "pink noise" has the same distribution of power for each octave, so the power between 0.5 Hz and 1 Hz is the same as between 5,000 Hz and 10,000 Hz. In other words, the white noise has equal amount of all frequency components (flat frequency response). The frequency response of pink noise drops with frequency - lower frequencies have more energy than higher frequencies. In the natural world, there are many physical processes which produce noise with what is known as a "pink" distribution of power: wind, pulsating quasars, heartbeat, structure of DNA, speech patterns, breathing, thought patterns, ebb and flow of tides, river heights, melodies, flow of traffic, stock market patterns. It is said to improve focus, alleviate headaches, soothe babies and improve quality of sleep.

The brilliant colors of the ocean. The ocean has always been known as a healing environment. Using New Energy Vision (NEV) the Earth element of red is very much present in the water. This grounds and energizes. The sand is brilliant yellow and green which are by contrast up-lifting. This is why you get wonderful ideas but remain grounded and energized when at the seaside. This environment is healthy and produces large amounts of negative ions

To affect the recuperation and well-being of the building itself via experimental means at once science-based, pseudoscientific, and esoteric. Go to the core, to the internal organs, the system control mechanisms. Consider circulation, breath. Materials matter. Matter matters. And invisible things.
